Acknowledgments

For a book that became so much longer than I originally intended it to be, the sweep of folks I am deeply grateful to has also become broader and deeper than expected. I apologize to anyone I have not properly acknowledged – hopefully I can make amends in future editions of this tome should I be so lucky!

First and foremost, I must thank my husband and son – my two “Rogers” – because they truly suffered the most (after me) with my many out-of-town disappearances for 1–2 weeks at a time during 2018 and my constant angst about finishing writing this book. Thank you, boys – I love you more than anything in this world!

Next are the wonderful folks who agreed to be reviewers of the first manuscript and endorsers of the book – they all appear in the front matter of this book through their endorsements. All I can say to each of you individually and collectively is that your early vote of confidence and helpful feedback meant everything to me!

I want to thank several organizations and their people whose support and encouragement of my professional work over the last few years fueled my book-writing fire. They include (in no particular order!): Erin Essenmacher, Stephen Walker, Judy Warner and Candace Rothermel of the National Association of Corporate Directors; Anita Allen of NACD New Jersey; Philipp Aeby, Alexandra Mihailescu Cichon, Jenny Nordby and Gina Walser of RepRisk (to whom I am doubly grateful for the permission to use and for the meticulous feedback for the RepRisk data deployed in this book); Larry Clinton of the Internet Security Alliance; Matthias Kleinhempel of IAE Business School in Buenos Aires, Argentina; Tina Kirby of Beazley; Dante A. Disparte of Risk Cooperative and Libra Association; Pat Harned, Moira McGinty, Tia Berry and Earnie Broughton at the Ethics and Compliance Association; Karen Poniachik of the Columbia Global Center in Santiago, Chile; Andrijana Bergant of IECE in Slovenia; Angel Alloza and Saida Garcia of Corporate Excellence – Centre for Reputation Leadership in Madrid; Stephane Martin and his team at Swiss-based Risk-In 2018 and 2019; several folks over the years at The Conference Board, especially Chuck Mitchell; Dr. Nir Kossovsky of Steel City Re; Richard Haass of the Council on Foreign Relations; Michael Abramowitz of Freedom House; Valmiki Mukherjee of the Cyber Future Foundation;

Laurent Bernat and Andras Molnar of the OECD; Dora Gomez of ACFE and HTCIA; Lisa Roberts of NASDAQ; Cindy Fornelli and Erin Dwyer previously of the Center for Audit Quality; Terry Slavin and Liam Dowd of Ethical Corporation; Ed Amoroso of Tag Cyber; Jack Fingerhut of Kaplan Education; Coco Brown of Athena Alliance; Vera Jelinek of NYU; Ben Boyd and Tonia Ries of Edelman; Dr. Maya Bundt of Swiss Re; Mark Spelman of the World Economic Forum; Susan Gray of S&P Global; Jeff Pratt of Microsoft; Bonnie Green of the World Food Programme; and Olajobi Makinwa of the UN Global Compact. Countless other individual friends and mentors deserve my gratitude for their encouragement, counsel, wisdom and thoughtfulness, including Jose Antonio Herce, Hans Decker, Clara Durodie, Alex Newton, Shari Siegel, Friso Van den Oord, Simon Franco, Reatha Clark King, Martin Coyne III, Dr. Kerry Sulkewicz, Jaime El Koury, Lisa Davis, Willem Punt, Rene Castro, Eduardo Brunet, Gabriel Cecchini, Michael Thomson, Craig Carroll, Leonard J. Ponzi, Prakash Sethi and Mark Brzezinski (and his dearly departed dad, Zbigniew, my first and greatest mentor).

I want to express my deepest gratitude to the three writers of this book's Foreword and Preface (because an almost 500-page book requires more than one introduction, of course!). Jorge Dajani and Amedee Prouvost of The World Bank kick off with a "Gloom to Boom" Foreword from the viewpoint of the worlds of ethics and risk management and their dedicated work at the World Bank. In his Preface, my long-time friend, Andrew Weissmann, provides the "Gloom to Boom" view of someone who has dedicated his entire career life to putting "the bad guys away", from individuals to corporations in furtherance of the deep values of ethics, compliance, the rule of law and the protection of democracy.

I couldn't not thank my "rat pack" of Spanish girlfriends who are always, and I mean always (via WhatsApp) there for me – Maribel Garcia, Margarita Garcia, Susana Villanueva, Geles Medialdea, Mayte Santos, Mariche Segovia, Esperanza Romero, Isa de Haro and Teresa Arce. Con cariño.

Thank you to the Routledge folks – especially Rebecca Marsh and Sophie Peoples who were nothing but encouraging and wonderful throughout this long and winding road!

A great big shout out to my amazing, now departed, father-in-law, the great artist, painter and sculptor, Peter Blanc, who was on this earth almost 104 years! One of his great paintings, "Night Fight", graces the cover of this book. Wow! What an honor and a privilege.

In closing, I must reach back to my own two parents who are no longer with us (though they will always be with me). My mother gave me love, focus and resilience and my dad gave me adventure, discovery and creativity. I have dedicated past books to my mom but never to my dad, who remains (as Churchill once said) "a riddle wrapped up in an enigma" for me to this day since I lost him when I was very young. The photo on the dedication page says it all about him.

Gratefully,
Andrea
