Future-Proofing Governance (& Democracy)

Dear Friends,

Last month's newsletter was called "Exponential tech requires exponential responsibility". This month we continue with that theme with an additional twist - the lens of good governance and democracy.

Here you can find the link to my latest piece for Diplomatic Courier titled "Future-Proofing Democracy: Four Scenarios and a Plan" where, among other things, I liken democracy in government to governance in organizations.

This piece is also a chapter in the new DC Book-azine "G7 Hiroshima Summit" with an excellent collection of timely articles on current affairs.

On the tech governance front, I am delighted to announce my affiliation with XRSI (emerging/immersive technology safety initiative). I am joining as their Strategic Governance and ESG Advisor as part of an interdisciplinary global team of tech and non tech experts dedicated to governance, ethics and safety in the metaverse and beyond. Read the announcement here and visit their website here.

I met the great folks at XRSI when they invited me to do this Metaverse Keynote last December. You can check my avatar delivering the keynote here.

Until the next one - onward, upward, forward!

Democracy is threatened by autocracy and populism while organizational governance is threatened by poor leadership and bad guard railing. Yet global trends suggest that stakeholders in all kind of regimes—not just democracies—are demanding more resilient institutions, writes Andrea Bonime-Blanc.
